Student Taurence Armstrong finally obtains his talk show goals

BIG DREAMS BECOME A BIG REALITY

By Austin Arnold
Reporter

Almost all students come to the University to one day earn a degree and live their dreams. It is an idea captured in the University's slogan, "Dream Big!" And one student may be on his way to reaching his own.

Senior Taurence Armstrong aspires to be a famous talk show host. He said he came up with an idea for his own talk show when he was in the 10th grade. Now, after a lot of hard work and persistence, the idea has turned into reality. Armstrong is the creator, executive producer and host of "BG on TV."

"The goal of BG on TV" is to help make the actions of young adults, ages 18-24, match their desires," Armstrong said. "We hope to inspire young adults through our show by having guests on that are living their dreams and have inspiring stories to tell."

School spirit relies on student body participation

By Jessica Hanna
Reporter

Competing with the orange and brown of school spirit, it is common to see the various colors of other collegiate teams sported by University students.

Junior Andrew Steckel, a sports management major and self-proclaimed University athletics fan, said he does not wear clothing depicting any other school while on campus.

A follower of most University sports, especially hockey, football, baseball and basketball, Steckel said that representing the school benefits the campus itself as well as the athletic teams.

"I feel you made a choice to come to this campus and you should try to get the best out of it by representing your campus, not representing a school you didn't decide to go to," Steckel said.

Senior Jacob Lawrence, who played for the men's soccer team the past four years at the University, said that it can be disheartening as an athlete to go to the field before a home game and pass people wearing Ohio State jerseys on the way.

"It's a struggle when you work so very hard during preseason and during weight lifting and running mile tests and all this stuff," Lawrence said. "You put in so much effort to put on that orange jersey and represent around 20,000 students, but then most of them are more concerned with other schools."

He said having spirited fans and audience participation can influence a

To prevent illnesses, junior Chelsea Dobbs washes her hands more often. In class, she avoids touching her face to stop the spread of germs.

However, Dobbs, like many students at the University, is not interested in getting the H1N1 vaccination.

"I'm just not that worried about it I guess," she said. "I just try to take what precautions I can and not worry about it."

She said this seems to be the case with other students too.

"It is either one extreme or the other," she said.

Praecepta fuses classical with pop music in concert

By Andrew Farr
Reporter

Forget Beethoven. Well, at least for Sunday night, as the music group Praecepta will present its latest student-composed music in "Praecepta Goes Pop!"

Praecepta is a student organization trying to promote new musical styles at the University. While the group is open for anyone to join, it primarily consists of music composition and performance students. Each semester, Praecepta hosts concerts including music written and performed by these students as well as some written by professional composers. These concerts

CAMPUS BRIEF

Downtown shuttle poll results, students in favor of downtown route

The final results of the Undergraduate Student Government's shuttle poll showed more students would be willing to pay a $20 fee to implement a downtown route.

Approximately 60 percent of the 877 total participants voted "yes" during Monday and Tuesday's online poll, said Joe Edens, senator for the college of education and human development.

The fee would also improve parking lot conditions, upgrade current shuttle facilities and potentially add night and weekend hours.

USG used the poll to gauge student reaction on the proposed fee, though the results of the poll will not dictate USG's final decision. The student government will come to a final decision on the fee in the upcoming weeks, but will take the student votes into consideration when voting.

The final results:

877 total votes (822 undergraduates, 55 graduates)

Undergraduates: 496 voted yes (60.3 percent of total vote)

Graduates: 28 votes yes (50.9 percent of total vote)

Ice skating club returns to campus

By Austin Arnold
Reporter

After being absent for a few years, the University's figure skating club is back on the ice.

Freshman Ruoyi Han, an exchange student from Beijing, China, has been figure skating for 12 years. While she was checking out the various clubs on campus, she was very happy to find a club skating team, she said.

"I didn't know that there was an ice skating club and I was really excited when I found out there was one," Han said.

Club President Danni Yurek said for a couple of years in the past she has tried to get a skating club together but there was little interest. This year, however, it all came together, she said.

"The last time the club was around was about three or four years ago, and now we have re-started it," she said. "It seems like we see new people every week when we skate, and I would say we have about 12 regulars in the club."

The figure skating club allows its members to further their skills and experience on the ice.

"In practice, I usually focus on a particular jump that I am working on as well as my footwork and speed," Yurek said.

Junior Amber Hansen said she has been skating collectively for about seven years, but has not skated much since middle school, until she joined the club. Now, she has the opportunity to catch up on what she has learned in the past, she said.

"I work on the old jumps that I used to do and I'm trying to regain my speed," she said. "I just try to remember the things that I do know how to do and build on those."

Other than working on technique, Hansen said her time on the ice is an outlet to getting away from stresses.

"I'm in the Air Force ROTC and sometimes it feels like it consumes my life and skating can help calm me down from that," she said.

Amanda Losch, the skating club's treasurer, said she agrees figure skating can really help reduce stress.

"When I'm on the ice, the feeling I get is that nothing else matters and I don't worry about school or anything else when I'm skating," she said.

Although some of the club members find figure skating relaxing, Losch said the notion

Americans remain unaware of realities overseas

MIKE THURAU
COLUMNIST

As the national debates over health care, energy policy and the national debt continue to be wrestled with, it becomes easy to forget that America is also deeply involved in the political, social, and economic affairs of people outside our borders.

Indeed, the majority of what takes place in Iraq and Afghanistan will never be known to the American public. Much more information is available on insurance costs and deficit spending than what the men and women who police and control Iraq in our name are actually engaging themselves in. However, while the true nature of the American situation in the Middle East is largely unavailable for public examination — just ask Geraldo — every now and again a story or two will slip through.

Nearly two weeks after the mild-mannered Army psychologist Nidal Hasan went on a shooting rampage at Fort Hood, TX, a CNN investigation confirmed four Iraqi detainees scheduled to be set free due to lack of evidence were murdered by American soldiers. Jess Cunningham waited nine months to come forward with his story, fearing retribution from fellow soldiers for telling the truth as to what took place at a Baghdad canal in 2007. Fortunately, Cunningham had the courage to realize "These men are not heroes. They're not saviors."

When coupled with similar stories taking place in Tikrit, Balad, on the Tigris and elsewhere, one has to wonder how many units of American soldiers are without a Sergeant Cunningham to report these killings. Whether it is a boy being killed because his backpack is mistaken for a weapon or apparently for no reason at all, these murders are unacceptable and a "War against Terror" is no justification.

While these killings are taking place on the other side of the world, it is important to keep in mind they are being committed in our name. It may offer solace to some that when properly reported, the victims' families are often compensated.

In one incident, Feb. 18, 2006, a taxi approached a checkpoint east of Baquba that was not properly marked with signs to slow down, according to an Army claim evaluation.

Soldiers fired on the taxi, killing a woman and severely wounding her daughter and son. After words, the Army approved an unusually large condolence payment of $7,500.

In Haditha, after one of the more notorious incidents involving American troops in Iraq, the Marines paid residents $38,000 after troops killed two dozen people in November 2005.

The United States military does not do civilian body counts, so accurate data is hard to come by. However, volunteers and journalists from both the U.S. and the U.K. estimate that the civilian body count in Iraq alone is between 94,194 and 102,780. For a more detailed breakdown of the context of these killings, visit iraqbodycount.org. In Afghanistan, it is even more difficult to gather accurate data, but a decent database on civilian claims for wrongful death charges against the United States military can be found at aclu.org.

It was not Osama Bin Laden who gave the government the right to spy on us or potentially detain us without trial. It was not Saddam Hussein who destroyed the American image as a champion of freedom. It was not Abu Al Zarqawi who spent over 3 trillion dollars that we and our children and our children's children will have to pay back.

These are all terrible men to be sure, and we are better off without them. However, they were never so powerful as they were made out to be. Americans live in the most powerful country in the world, and the only entity that has the power to make them less than free is its own government.

As always, Americans must make a choice between freedom and a banal worship of power and strength.

Despite criticism, violence in films serves necessary function

ERIC RHOADS
COLUMNIST

Have you ever watched a movie and wondered why it would have so much violence? Or even wondered why there wasn't more violence?

The effects of film, and violence in it, upon the viewing public have been well debated and documented. Taken in the wrong context, films with gratuitous violence can (and have) resulted in criminal acts that negatively affect our society. Films like "Natural Born Killers," which glorifies violence, has been dubbed by Premiere magazine as one of the 25 Most Dangerous Movies Ever Made.

"A Clockwork Orange" resulted in a series of copycat murders and sexual assault cases with the criminals citing the movie as a source of inspiration. And "Dead or Alive" enjoys a claim to fame as the goriest film ever made. The list could go on and on and on with films that have been blamed for countless unspeakable acts against human society.

So why the violence? Furthermore, why the outrage? After all, films like these don't actually sway the criminal to "pull the trigger" so to speak; that is an act of free will, albeit a demented one.

Violence has merit in film.

Further, it has cause for actually being part of film history. The outlet of violence may have begun as an act of rebellion against oppressive censorship in the film industry (especially during the 70s when the blood-levels rose to massive proportions in mainstream film for the first time). But today, its purpose may be slightly obscured by a common moviegoer.

Violence, for one, has many purposes in film, artistic or otherwise. Its merit cannot be boiled down to a single definite answer, but rather a blending of causes for inclusion. Sometimes it merely serves to drive the story forward. Sometimes it is used as a means of satire. Sometimes it is meant to be a deterrent. Take the aforementioned "Natural Born Killers."

The very nature of the film explores how violence is portrayed. The back DVD cover opens: "They didn't win a Nobel Prize, throw a record fastball or travel another acceptable path to fame. What fugitive lovers Mickey and Mallory did was kill people. Lots of people. The media took care of the rest."

Sounds like the type of film that warrants its controversy. As the film unfolds, people are dispatched in a variety of humorous/satirical ways. A famous scene includes an homage to the "I Love Lucy" show in which the characters in the film are being sexually and physically abused. It is a means to show that even the warm-loving comedy shows like "I Love Lucy" had undertones of spousal abuse, even if they did not show it.

The film does glorify violence. Anyone who has seen the film should not deny this fact. But it glorifies violence for a purpose. It explores the effects violence can have upon individuals, and how it isn't the violence itself which brings about violent individuals but rather, a misrepresentation by the media or a misunderstanding by the receiver of said media (in the case of the film — the deranged and mixed-up lovers Mickey and Mallory).

The merit of violence in film is necessary in order for us as human beings to better understand violence in our waking lives. It is a way of safely exploring the darkest reaches of human capability, and possibly offering solutions through witnessing those characters endure the violence.

Move over famine and disease, 'New Moon' is next evil to sweep the nation

RYAN SULLIVAN
COLUMNIST

By the time most of you read this, an immense evil will have befallen this world. Though some will hearken its arrival as a saving grace, I urge you all to not fall under the shadow of its influence.

No, I am not talking about the outbreak of some evil disease or plague, but of something much worse. I come to bring warnings of the evil that is... "New Moon," the new Twilight saga movie.

Now, don't get me wrong, the special effects in the movie look decent. But don't be fooled by its clever pretense of being nothing more than an adaptation of a book. Men the world over know this movie is nothing more than PG-13-approved porn for women.

That's right, I said it. Porn for women.

My girlfriend has been all but drooling over this film since she saw the first one. And as far as I can tell, she isn't the only one.

This movie, despite never having been seen, has already sold more tickets than last week's number one movie. Right now, it is accounting for approximately 94 percent of online ticket sales. No, that is not an exaggeration; it is based on a news release from "Fandango."

I wanted to surprise my girlfriend and went to buy tickets for the movie. For the Friday showing, there was only one showing left they had tickets for. I ended up having to get tickets for the Sunday showing.

When I got to her apartment, she squealed like a little girl. She is 21. She called her mother to tell her she was afraid she wouldn't get to see it on opening weekend and her mom got jealous.

Am I honestly the only one who sees an issue with this?

There has to be some reprieve. If they are vampires and werewolves, can't we just, as a society, go out and buy silver bullets and wooden spikes?

But I will be honest, the Twilight problem doesn't end there.

The vampire craze has become the new wizard craze. I don't see it as being too long before people start to go out and put those caps on their teeth to give themselves fangs. Yes, I have seen them on people and no, they don't look good.

And the vampire invasion doesn't end there. The CW show, "The Vampire Diaries," is averaging four million viewers per episode, yet the show after that, "Supernatural," loses almost half of them.

Some of the most popular book series for adolescents right now all have to do with vampires, whether it be the Twilight series or any of the other bandwagon-jumping series looking to make a quick buck while the getting is good.

There are even other vampire movies that are cashing in on the craze, including "The Vampire's Assistant," which pulled in $13.5 million domestically and is still performing well overseas.

Now that we know what we are facing, we have to do something about it. I encourage you to all start carrying around holy water, crucifixes, onions and peanut butter to fend off the ensuing hordes before you too are converted.

As for me, I will be going behind enemy lines to see what intel I can gather. ... yeah, that's it, intel.

What? You can't honestly expect me to miss the biggest movie event of the year can you?

Debate team to host 66th annual Falcon Classic

By D'Erra Jackson
Reporter

Members of the University's Forensic and Debate team will host and compete in the 66th Annual Falcon Classic Tournament this weekend to attempt to win the 1st place trophy.

The forensic and debate team is a competitive co-curriculum team where students prepare speeches and performances, such as informative speaking and dramas, to compete against students from other universities. The group was founded in 1919 and it currently has 20 members and more than 4,000 alumni.

More than 30 universities, including the Ohio State University and University of Michigan, will bring close to 800 colleagues, judges, students and prospective students to participate in two days of competition. The tournament will be based in the Education Building and will last from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. both Saturday and Sunday.

"I'm really excited [about the tournament]," junior Katie Hodgdon said. "Working on the tournament is a lot of fun. Sometimes it can be stressful, obviously, but it's a lot of fun to kind of just see the fundamentals of how a tournament works that way. When you're competing on your own you appreciate how much work goes into a tournament."

Hodgdon is a three-year varsity member. She competed in speech and debate in high school and was interested in doing the same in college, so she joined the team.

Director Paul Alday has coached the team for 11 years. He said the tournaments work like women's

"This is an activity where people who are in it definitely enjoy it and students can see the different things they can do. This is something that they can enjoy and they will come because they like the activity itself."

gymnastics. Each participant competes in different events and those events are scored and totaled with other scores from the same team to determine which team is the best, he said. Each team receives an award for winning and each person receives an award for making the top six.

Currently, the University's team is ranked No. 1 in the nation in two different leagues and has many trophies.

The tournaments not only serve as competitions for teams, but they also help attract future students to the University. Usually if students are interested in the tournaments, they are inspired to attend the University, Alday said.

Suzanne V.L. Berg, graduate coach who assists Alday, shared similar sentiments.

"I think it does have a great deal of positive effects for students, I've seen that for years," she said. "This is an activity where people who are in it definitely enjoy it and students can see the different things they can do. This is something that they can enjoy and they will come because they like the activity itself."

Freshman Shirley O'Nan, a novice member, chose the University because of the debate team.

"When I was looking for a college I kept in mind that I wanted to be a part of a forensic speech on the collegiate level, so once I found out Bowling Green had one, I was set on going to BG and I definitely wanted to join the team," she said.

Like Hodgdon, O'Nan is also looking forward to the tournament.

"I'm very, very excited," she said. "To be able to have so many people coming to this campus and to be able to be on our own campus in the area that we know is great. I'm just excited to get out there and be in novice events this time."

Members have put in a lot of time and work in preparing for the tournament. Hodgdon said it's similar to a 40-hour work week.

O'Nan said she practices whenever she can.

"I usually have my car rides to school and from school [to practice] and then I also practice while I'm at home in the shower, while I'm here in the complex because I tend to hang out here a lot and I usually try to get in front of a mirror to just focus on my own voice," she said.

Members have other future events to look forward to. They have a tournament coming up in December at Otterbein College and Suffolk College. They also have a tournament in February, which will also be at the University.

that some people do not regard it as a sport is as wrong as it is frustrating.

"People look at figure skating as fun, pretty and nice but not a sport," she said. "It's a physical and mental sport and you have to be in control of both of those elements in order to do anything."

Yurek said that many do not realize figure skating is as physical as many other sports.

"What some people don't understand is that figure skating is tough and there are as many injuries in it as other sports," she said. "I tore my shoulder once and fractured a thumb through skating."

The club holds its practices on Thursday nights from 8 to 9 p.m.

Many members of the skating club have a number of years of experience, but Losch said that should not discourage anyone from coming out and skating with club.

"We encourage all skaters of all skill levels and styles to skate to join," she said. "We actually have a member who has never skated before this year, so everyone is welcome."

BG making 500-mile trip to New York for WNIT game

Falcons to face Rachele Fitz and Marist in third-round Preseason WNIT game tomorrow afternoon

By Andrew Harner
Sports Editor

Women's basketball coach Curt Miller and junior guard Lauren Prochaska will be meeting New York's version of themselves against Marist.

In Poughkeepsie, they have their own version of Prochaska in senior Rachele Fitz, the two-time defending Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Player of the Year and their own version of Miller in coach Brian Giorgis, who has a 135-27 record the past five seasons.

"Our programs are a lot alike over the last five or six years,"

Miller said. "[We're] programs that mirror each other, so it's a game, a little bit, for bragging rights."

Miller has led his team to a 137-28 record the past five seasons and was led by Mid-American Conference Player of the Year Prochaska last season.

But now Prochaska will have to be one of the players the Falcon will employ to try to slow down Fitz.

"She's clearly their best player," Miller said. "She's a very difficult matchup for a post player because she's an unbelievable finisher. She has an uncanny way of being able to finish unorthodoxed shots."

With 49 points (17-for-27 shooting) and 22 rebounds through the first two games, Fitz will be looking to lead the Red Foxes (1-1) to a win against BG tomorrow afternoon in the third round of the Preseason WNIT in a game that pits the two best mid-majors from the past five seasons against each other.

But the Falcons (1-1) aren't going to sit idly by as they will roll out a confident starting lineup, despite coming off a 91-72 blow-

Falcons look to rebound against Iowa

By Sean Shapiro
Assistant Sports Editor

It seems all it takes to beat Iowa this season is to break the 50-points margin.

Through two games this season the Hawkeyes have scored exactly 50-points and suffered a pair of losses at home to Texas-San Antonio and Duquesne.

"It is disappointing to our guys because we had the one point lead and thought we could finish it out," Iowa coach Todd Lickliter said. "They just fight so hard and they care. These guys will be in tomorrow wanting to look at tape and get better."

Even though Lickliter's team will be looking at tape from their loss, BG will still look to be the third team this season to hand Iowa a loss at home, as the opening tip takes place tonight at 9:05.

Even though BG has broken the 50-point barrier twice already this season, they are also coming off a tough loss losing 101-57 to Xavier.

In the loss BG struggled at both ends of the court, getting

Falcons on the run... to bowl eligibility

With win, BG football team will go above .500 for first time

By Sean Shapiro
Assistant Sports Editor

All of the Falcon football team's goals are still in place with two games remaining.

A win this afternoon would meet one of the Falcons' goals — becoming bowl eligible and guaranteeing at least a .500 record this season.

"Our goals are still in hand and we need to finish these last two games," senior receiver Freddie Barnes said. "We have a plan that needs to be executed."

After getting snubbed from a bowl last season, Barnes feels the biggest step toward the bowl season is proving themselves as a marketable team by winning the last two games.

The first of those two is tonight at Doyt Perry Stadium at 5:30 against an Akron team, which is starting a quarterback who almost decided to play for the Falcons instead of the Zips.

Patrick Nicely had committed to play for former coach Gregg Brandon, but after he was fired and the recruiting process came to an end, Nicely was heading to Akron instead.

"I met him a couple times just in passing," BG quarterback Tyler Sheehan said. "I never really got to know him, but he seemed like a nice guy."

Senior running back wants to close out season running hard

By Andrew Harner
Sports Editor

As a 2006 Freshman All-American, Falcon running back Chris Bullock knows he can be a productive player.

But after the since-graduated Anthony Turner and current starter Willie Geter burst onto the scene in 2007, Bullock has seemingly been an afterthought in the Falcon offense, gaining 894 yards in the three seasons since his freshman campaign when he netted 769 yards.

Now 15th on BG's all-time list for rushing yards with 1,652, the fifth-year senior said he'd like to finish the year out strong.

"Hopefully I can produce more and help the team out," Bullock said.

A lot of that will depend on how hard he practices.

First-year coach Dave Clawson has consistently rewarded players who perform well in practice, changing his starting kicker and one defensive tackle during the season.

Clawson said Bullock has shown promise some weeks but not on a consistent basis, which is why Geter has seen the majority of attempts this season.

"A lot of it with Chris is his week to week practice," Clawson said. "There's weeks when Chris practices really well that we have confidence in him going into the game. In the last two weeks, he's practiced."

Falcon hockey to play at Michigan, Toledo

By Paul Barney
Reporter

The BG hockey team won their first game a week ago to snap an eight-game winless streak — which tied the 1981-82 team for the longest winless streak to begin a season.

With the win the Falcons will look to carry that momentum into this weekend, as they play a home-and-home series against No. 16 Michigan.

Today the Falcons (1-8-1, 1-4-1 Central Collegiate Hockey Association) head to Ann Arbor to take on the Wolverines (4-6-0, 2-4-0 CCHA) at 7:35 p.m.

The teams will then conclude the two-game series tomorrow night in Toledo at the new Lucas County Arena beginning at 7:05.

The series was split a year ago, with BG winning 3-0 at

Denise Van De Walle and Carolyn Condit are really good friends.

Right behind Van De Walle, Condit is the second-longest tenured coach in the Mid-American Conference, with a record of 470-344 at Miami and 569-424 overall.

That's 970 MAC wins between them both — and a combined 53 years of coaching.

"We have shared a lot together in this conference," Van De Walle said. "We've seen a lot of changes, that's for sure."

After starter Chris Jacquemain was suspended from the team earlier this season, Nicely took over the starting job following another injury.

Once again the Falcon offense will heavily rely on the senior duo of Sheehan and Barnes who have connected 117 times for 1,285 yards and 12 touchdowns.

That doesn't bode well for the Akron defense, which has been allowing 28.8 points a game this since the second half against Buffalo.

"I'm very excited about the progress our defense is making," BG coach Dave Clawson said. "I think the last two games we've really put together some good efforts. The second half against Buffalo and then that game [Miami] I feel is the most complete game we've played all season."

And Clawson was rewarded for his decision.

Bullock bulled his way ahead 11 times against Miami last Thursday for 82 yards — his best single-game output since torching Temple for a career-high 182 yards on Oct. 28, 2006.

Because he is bigger (5-foot-11, 223 pounds) than Geter (5-foot-8, 175 pounds), he gets the nod if the Falcons are leading late in the game because he is able to gain small chunks of yardage (career average of 4.5 yards per carry) almost every time he runs, which keeps the clock ticking down.

But because BG has played from behind or held a tight lead in the fourth quarter of many games this season, Bullock has spent more time on the sidelines than on the gridiron.

"Chris knows when we have the lead and we need to get some yards on the ground, he's going to be the guy," said senior quarterback Tyler Sheehan.

"We all knew he had talent after his freshman year," he later added. "It's just a matter of him getting it done on a regular basis."

Bullock admitted his diminished role on the team has been frustrating, but he has always done his best to make the most of it, whether that be making a block or gaining a couple yards for a first down.

"It gets frustrating, but you have to deal with your position and role on the team," Bullock said. "I just do the best at that. Whenever I get in, I try to make the best of it."

Senior Tamika Nurse and junior Tracy Pontius lead the charge for the Falcons, each scoring 28 points in the first two games and combining to make 11-of-24 three-point shots.

The two true point guards are still getting a feel for playing with each other on the court, since they both can't be in control of the ball as it comes up court.

"They're both very talented with the ball in their hands and learning to play with each other," Miller said. "They're off the ball a little more than they are used to."

Marist is also coming off a

Did you know?

The school colors of orange and brown were selected when President Williams asked representatives from industrial arts, home economics, and a student to chose the colors. Rumor has it that the colors were suggested by Prof. Winslow after he saw them on a lady's hat. However, no record can be found that indicates formal approval by faculty or students. The colors were chosen because they "made a pleasing combination, and as they knew, were not used by any other colleges."

"Hopefully I can produce more and help the team out," Bullock said.

A lot of that will depend on how hard he practices.

First-year coach Dave Clawson has consistently rewarded players who perform well in practice, changing his starting kicker and one defensive tackle during the season.

Clawson said Bullock has shown promise some weeks but not on a consistent basis, which is why Geter has seen the majority of attempts this season.

"A lot of it with Chris is his week to week practice," Clawson said. "There's weeks when Chris practices really well that we have confidence in him going into the game. In the last two weeks, he's practiced."

Falcon hockey to play at Michigan, Toledo

By Paul Barney
Reporter

The BG hockey team won their first game a week ago to snap an eight-game winless streak — which tied the 1981-82 team for the longest winless streak to begin a season.

With the win the Falcons will look to carry that momentum into this weekend, as they play a home-and-home series against No. 16 Michigan.

Today the Falcons (1-8-1, 1-4-1 Central Collegiate Hockey Association) head to Ann Arbor to take on the Wolverines (4-6-0, 2-4-0 CCHA) at 7:35 p.m.

The teams will then conclude the two-game series tomorrow night in Toledo at the new Lucas County Arena beginning at 7:05.

The series was split a year ago, with BG winning 3-0 at

Denise Van De Walle and Carolyn Condit are really good friends.

Right behind Van De Walle, Condit is the second-longest tenured coach in the Mid-American Conference, with a record of 470-344 at Miami and 569-424 overall.

That's 970 MAC wins between them both — and a combined 53 years of coaching.

"We have shared a lot together in this conference," Van De Walle said. "We've seen a lot of changes, that's for sure."

Though Van De Walle has known Condit for years, her 11th seeded Falcons are ready to take on her squad, the third seeded Miami RedHawks at 1:30 today at the SeaGate Centre

The RedHawks are a good team offensively as they entered the tournament hitting a solid .222, which was the third best in the conference. They are not in the top three in any other category, but they also haven't struggled much with anything.

Miami's Michelle Metzler is a key player on their team. She ranks sixth in the conference in attack percentage at .306 and seventh in blocks at .089 per set.

No. 14 Stanford vs. California

Stanford-75

As much as I want to pick against Stanford because they are totally not legit, they are home so maybe next week they'll lose.

Stanford 31, Cal 28

Last week I made fun of Stanford's dancing tree mascot, and they responded with a romp. They've earned my respect.

Stanford 3, Cal 0

After beating Oregon and USC, another win for Stanford is as likely as all the same people being in Judd Apatow's next movie.

After starter Chris Jacquemain was suspended from the team earlier this season, Nicely took over the starting job following another injury.

In limited action this season Nicely has thrown four touchdown passes averaging 162.2 yards per contest.

Offensively BG has fared well without Nicely as the BG offense has averaged 393.4 yards of total offense this season, 324.7 of those yards coming through the air.

Once again the Falcon offense will heavily rely on the senior duo of Sheehan and Barnes who have connected 117 times for 1,285 yards and 12 touchdowns.

That doesn't bode well for the Akron defense, which has been allowing 28.8 points a game this season. On the other side of the ball the BG defense will look to contain the Akron offense, which has relied heavily on the run due to their freshman quarterback.

Even though the Falcons have struggled against the run this season — allowing 198.3 rushing yards game a game — their play as of late has improved since the second half against Buffalo.

"I'm very excited about the progress our defense is making," BG coach Dave Clawson said. "I think the last two games we've really put together some good efforts. The second half against Buffalo and then that game [Miami] I feel is the most complete game we've played all season."

Against Miami, the BG defense had five takeaways and stopped the RedHawks twice in the red zone.

The two red zone stops were the Falcons' first since their loss to Boise State in early September.

And Clawson was rewarded for his decision.

Bullock bulled his way ahead 11 times against Miami last Thursday for 82 yards — his best single-game output since torching Temple for a career-high 182 yards on Oct. 28, 2006.

Because he is bigger (5-foot-11, 223 pounds) than Geter (5-foot-8, 175 pounds), he gets the nod if the Falcons are leading late in the game because he is able to gain small chunks of yardage (career average of 4.5 yards per carry) almost every time he runs, which keeps the clock ticking down.

But because BG has played from behind or held a tight lead in the fourth quarter of many games this season, Bullock has spent more time on the sidelines than on the gridiron.

"Chris knows when we have the lead and we need to get some yards on the ground, he's going to be the guy," said senior quarterback Tyler Sheehan.

"We all knew he had talent after his freshman year," he later added. "It's just a matter of him getting it done on a regular basis."

Bullock admitted his diminished role on the team has been frustrating, but he has always done his best to make the most of it, whether that be making a block or gaining a couple yards for a first down.

"It gets frustrating, but you have to deal with your position and role on the team," Bullock said. "I just do the best at that. Whenever I get in, I try to make the best of it."

"I play when I'm told and I do my best whenever I get in," he later added. "In practice, I try to stay focused and show what I can do."

But still, Bullock is able to look back at his career with fondness, remembering the 2007 GMAC Bowl and his stellar freshman campaign.

"I'd really go back to my freshman year," Bullock said. "It was a different system. We really ran the ball."

But he would also like to end his career on a high note, namely the second bowl game of his career.

"Just show the world or just the U.S. what we can do," Bullock said. "Through the season we've built and figured out how to win

Senior Tamika Nurse and junior Tracy Pontius lead the charge for the Falcons, each scoring 28 points in the first two games and combining to make 11-of-24 three-point shots.

The two true point guards are still getting a feel for playing with each other on the court, since they both can't be in control of the ball as it comes up court.

The school colors of orange and brown were selected when President Williams asked representatives from industrial arts, home economics, and a student to choose the colors. Rumor has it that the colors were suggested by Prof. Winslow after he saw them on a lady's hat. However, no record can be found that indicates formal approval by faculty or students. The colors were chosen because they "made a pleasing combination, and as they knew, were not used by any other colleges."

Tasty get-better-quick remedies

TAYLOR RICHTER
DESIGN EDITOR

Today I feel like that guy who stood still instead of stepping backwards with the rest of the line when someone asked the line for a volunteer. And what is it that I was volunteered for? All day with my head slammed up in a clamp. Translation — I'm sick.

No, it's not the swine, everyone. So settle down. Granted, it would be awesomely ironic if The BG News food columnist contracted the swine flu.

Anyway, one of the worst things about being sick at school is that the blurry view from your futon normally only holds yesterday's half-eaten Five Dollar Holla, fruit gummies and a stack of Oreo cookies with the cream licked off of them. Not exactly the food momma makes that cures everything.

In honor of my runny nose, I've compiled two of my favorite get-better-quicker remedies, all of which can be found on campus or bought with a meal plan.

Lemon, honey and love

If 1990s Nickelodeon's "All That" were a get-well recipe, it would no doubt be this tasty combination of warm lemon and honey. Start out with a mug of water filled about 4/5 of the way to the top. Heat it in the microwave as hot as you can handle and then add a few squirts of lemon juice to taste. Finally, stir in a few teaspoons of honey to take a bit of the sour edge off. Don't be surprised if when you take a sip you immediately look around for your grandmother. It's just a mild side effect of this back-home goody.

Grilled Cheese and Tomato Soup (plus an egg-cellent surprise)

One of the best things about having sandwich shops on campus is that you can have them make you grilled cheese. Little known fact: grilled cheese at the University is just a vegetarian panini. And if you bat your eyes (or look pathetic enough sniffing into your tissue), I bet you could a few extra slices of gooeyness free of charge. Tomato soup can be found all over campus. The best stuff is in the Union and always at Outtakes. When you get back to your room, cook an egg in the microwave and, once salted and peppered, add to the top of your grilled cheese. Enjoy while watching reruns of "The Golden Girls" to see the full healing effect.

Jeni's Mom's Secret Recipe

Whenever I'm sick, I always seem to crave weird foods. Odd combinations of Gatorades, sodas and bubbly waters are normally how I satisfy my wacked-out taste buds. Today, my friend Jeni told me about her mom's weirdest, yet most soul-soothing, recipe that fits right into this category. Heat a cup of milk in the microwave until it's just a little hotter than your preference. Melt a pat of butter (about a tablespoon) into the milk and serve with a dash of pepper.

Film showing end of the world makes viewers wish for the end of the movie

By Aaron Helfferich

The disaster movie is one genre that doesn't change much from film to film. Whether it's an alien spacecraft, a giant creature, or worldwide climate change, there isn't much to differentiate worldly destruction. Roland Emmerich has already proven his experience with these themes. As the director of "Independence Day," "Godzilla," and "The Day After Tomorrow," Emmerich has an eye for finding the world's most cherished and recognizable historical monuments to destroy with special effects. While his latest film is no exception to the rule, "2012" is merely a combination of the best and the worst of disaster films.

"2012" is loosely based on the belief that the Mayan calendar predicted the end of the world. According to the calendar, that fateful event is expected to occur on December 21, 2012.

Jackson doctor avoids jail in support case

By Ken Ritter
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — The physician being investigated in Michael Jackson's death reached an agreement Monday in a separate child support case that will keep him out of jail.

Prosecutors sought an arrest warrant for Dr. Conrad Murray after he failed to appear for previous hearings in the case. He is accused of owing more than $14,000 to a California woman and her son dating back to October 2008.

With Murray in court, his lawyer Christopher Aaron paid $700 cash and promised to pay another $303 as part of the deal approved by Clark County District Court Judge Gerald Hardcastle.

Aaron has said Murray, a cardiologist, has been unable to pay because he had to close his medical practice and move due to threats following Jackson's death June 25.

"He's radioactive," Aaron told The Associated Press. "He's unemployed and unemployable."

In Oct. 27 court filings, Clark County Deputy District Attorney Gerard Costantian asked the court to find Murray in contempt and send him to jail unless he could demonstrate an inability to pay.

The Los Angeles County coroner has ruled Jackson's death a homicide, caused primarily by propofol and another sedative.

Murray told investigators he administered propofol as a sleep aid, along with multiple sedatives, in the hours before Jackson died.

Murray has not been charged with a crime but is the focus of the Los Angeles police investigation, according to documents made public with search warrants served as his home and offices.

Miranda Sevcik, a spokeswoman for Murray, said he continues to maintain he neither prescribed nor administered anything to Jackson that should have killed him.

Murray, who is licensed in Nevada, Texas and California, had been hired to a lucrative $150,000-per-month contract to be the pop star's personal physician during a world tour.

At the time, the financially troubled physician owed at least $780,000 for settlements against his business, outstanding mortgage payments on his large Las Vegas house, delinquent student loans, credit cards and child support.

Another judge in Las Vegas is due Wednesday to consider unsealing search warrant documents stemming from a police raid Aug. 11 at a Las Vegas pharmacy from which authorities say Murray legally purchased propofol.

Meanwhile, Janet Jackson said she blamed Murray for her brother Michael's death.

She told ABC News in an interview to air Wednesday that Murray should no longer be allowed to practice medicine.

"He was the one that was administering," Jackson said. "I think he is responsible."

CLEVELAND (AP) — Fresh off her triumph at the Country Music Association Awards, Taylor Swift has won a deal to create a line of greeting cards for American Greetings Corp.

P90X

found with the release of the original Power 90, he decided to step up the fitness program into an extreme version and Power 90 Extreme, P90X, was released onto the market.

Since its release in 2004, P90X has become Beachbody's top product, selling over one million copies, and the infomercial Horton sells his creation on became the best-selling infomercial in April 2008.

It was through Horton's infomercial that the University's Student Enrollment Communication Center's Interim Director, Sandy Mencer, discovered P90X a few years ago.

"I had been trying to figure out how to take my workout to the next level," Mencer explained. "I liked that it exercised and engaged different parts of the muscle."

Mencer's reason for ordering P90X is the platform on which the product's advertising campaign stands. What sets P90X apart from other home fitness programs is that it does just that — it exercises the muscles in different ways to engage all parts of the body.

The technique, called "Muscle Confusion" in P90X, ensures that the body never becomes used to a specific routine by continuously changing the exercise moves.

"I liked it because I'd been working out — I tried Jane Fonda, Buns of Steel, and a book called 'Strong Women Stay Young' got me into lifting weights," Mencer recalled. "But the lifting just got simpler."

University graduate student Morgan Seifert was also unhappy with the results she was getting working out on her own, and after hearing great things about P90X, she decided to give it a try.

"It was at home, so I knew I could do it," Seifert said. "It is hard making the time to do it because some days it's an hour and some days it's an hour and a half. So it is a time commitment."

The in-home aspect of P90X is one advantage the fitness program has because it can be done on the user's own time, even when the gym is closed, but the in-home aspect can also be a disadvantage to the program.

Layne Davis is the graduate assistant for Recreation and Wellness in charge of fitness programs at the University. Davis sees the advantage of working out at home, but she also sees some problems with it.

"It's like taking a group exercise class in your living room," Davis commented. "But there isn't anything keeping you there. People won't stick with it unless they're really self-motivated."

Self-motivation is definitely a key ingredient in the user's success with the P90X program. As the name alludes, the fitness program stretches over a total of 90 days, alternating exercise routines on certain days and weeks of the program, and requiring the user to exercise six days of the week. The routines promote full-body fitness by offering strength training, stretching and cardiovascular exercises. The program includes routines such as yoga, chest and back exercises and abs sessions that are taught on the DVDs by Horton and backup exercisers.

"I like the fact that the people in the videos are working as hard as you are," Seifert said of the DVDs. "It makes me feel good, it means it's more effective."

Seifert and Mencer are not the only ones who have found P90X to be an effective workout program. In addition to the millions of P90X programs that have been sold over the years, Horton has also received endorsements for P90X from celebrities like Pink, Ashton Kutcher, Demi Moore and Sheryl Crow.

The P90X program is not popular because it's easy. That much is apparent. Everyone has a certain aspect of the program that presents problems for them, but in the end it's the problems that pay off the most, and that's where the program garners its popularity.

"There were so many push-ups and some that I just couldn't do," Mencer admitted. "But I got really good at push-ups."

Mencer recommends that anyone who wants to try P90X should keep in mind that it is difficult and that they should work at their own pace with the routines.

"Take it slow," Mencer advised. "Don't feel bad if you have to try things a few times. Sometimes I had to try things three or four times until I was like, 'Oh, that's how that works!'"

Before putting P90X on that Christmas list, visit www.beachbody.com for more information about the home fitness programs and others offered through the Beachbody company.

Top ten tips to survive Black Friday madness

By Alissa O'Neill
Assistant Pulse Editor

1. Set that alarm clock nice and loud. Go ahead and blare some Miley Cyrus at an alarming decibel at 4:30 a.m. Hey, if you're going to be up at such an ungodly hour so should every long-lost relative staying in your house for the holidays.

2. Coffee is going to be a necessity since the sun will not even be up when this adventure begins. Check that local Starbucks, it may open early for Black Friday festivities. If it doesn't though you may want to pull the coffee maker out the night before to save yourself some trouble in the morning. Just be careful that you don't spill it in your lap while maneuvering the parking lot.

3. Parking lots are going to be the pre-battle ground, make sure you are on the offensive. That sweet, old lady you let take the prime parking spot? Points for being nice, but you lose when she gleefully beats you to all the best deals.

4. Develop a plan of attack. Those hours you spend standing in line can be put to good use - think about what you're there to get and where it's located. Be sure that your plan follows a logical order so you aren't wasting precious time running back and forth across the store. This isn't the time to work off that Thanksgiving weight.

5. Stay on your toes when those doors open. Make sure you're ready and anchored because you do not want to be that person who makes the evening news after landing in the hospital.

6. Stay focused. You know what you're there for, don't get sidetracked. I know that those shoes are a really good deal, but do you really need another pair of sparkly high heels? Maybe you do, but if so come back for them after you get the deals you woke up early to get.

7. Watch those shopping carts. Not only for swipers trying to snag some of your hard-earned deals, but also for those more physical Black Friday fanatics who may try to use their carts as weapons. Although keep in mind that if people attack you with a shopping cart that does give you the right to attack back.

8. When leaving the store, think quick. Like lightning. Ignore all those people offering you insane amounts of money for your well-purchased items - those are your deals, you woke up early to get them. You snooze, you lose and you, my friend, did neither of those.

9. After you secure your purchases in your trunk, sit in the car and take a deep breath. Then play your favorite song as loud as you can and dance - your success deserves a dance party to celebrate.

10. The best tip for Black Friday? Avoid all of the madness and stay in bed and sleep. But if you do decide to join the madness, keep the above tips in mind.

Oprah plans to cancel TV show, leaves future a mystery

By Caryn Rousseau
The Associated Press

CHICAGO-- "The Oprah Winfrey Show," an iconic broadcast that began as a local Chicago talk show and grew over two decades into the foundation of a media empire worth billions, will end its run in 2011 after 25 seasons on the air, Winfrey's production company said last night.

Winfrey, who from a seat on the couch of her set in Chicago's West Loop neighborhood became a billionaire and one of the most powerful women in entertainment, plans to announce the final date for her show during a live broadcast tomorrow, said Harpo Productions Inc.

A Harpo spokeswoman declined to comment yesterday when asked if Oprah's decision to end the show meant she planned to retire, or would move her broadcasting efforts onto a long-rumored Oprah network.

Winfrey's 24th season opened earlier this year with a bang, as she drew more than 20,000 fans to the city's Magnificent Mile on Michigan Avenue for a Chicago block party with the Black Eyed Peas.

She followed up with a series of blockbuster interviews - Mike Tyson and Evander Holyfield, exclusives with singer Whitney Houston and ESPN's Erin Andrews, and just this week, former Alaska governor, GOP vice presidential candidate and best-selling author Sarah Palin. She found time between shows to lobby the International Olympic Committee in Denmark for Chicago's failed bid to host the 2016 Olympics.

Winfrey started her broadcasting career as a teenager in Nashville, Tenn., reading the news at WVOL. Two years later, Winfrey started co-anchoring news broadcasts on WTVF-TV in Nashville. In 1976 she moved to Baltimore to anchor newscasts at WJZ-TV before becoming host of the local talk show "People Are Talking."

In 1984, she relocated to Chicago to host WLS-TV's morning talk show "A.M. Chicago" - the show was became "The Oprah Winfrey Show" one year later. She set up Harpo the following year and her talk show went into syndication, rising to become one of the most successful in the history of broadcasting.

"I came from nothing," Winfrey wrote in the 1998 book "Journey to Beloved." "No power. No money. Not even my thoughts were my own. I had no free will. No voice. Now, I have the freedom, power, and will to speak to millions every day - having come from nowhere."

2012

The film also features more mindless scientific talk about the planets aligning and the earth's crust is shifting due to increasingly large sun-flares, but the true focus of the film is on the updated use of special effects in conjunction with the destined cataclysmic events. With the latest and greatest destruction footage ever created for film, "2012" audiences might be expecting a non-stop thrill ride.

While it's true that no audience should ever expect top notch acting and a winning script from a disaster film, they should at the very least find a suspenseful edge-of-your-seat thriller. Whether it's a conveniently placed crack between the fingers of the Sistine Chapel, or a tight-rope walking dog, these cheap attempts at humor continually destroy the pace of this film. Thanks to many of these worthless gags, the film takes on a bloated runtime that extends just over two and a half hours.

This added time is poorly spent on the similar looking destruction footage from recent disaster films. "2012" features trembling earthquakes, exploding volcanoes, capsizing boats, and much more. Since we can virtually create anything and travel anywhere possible through the use of special effects, there is no reason why we should continually experience more of the same. After the fourth time "2012" recycles a scene of someone narrowly outrunning the slowest moving apocalypse in movie history, you might be wishing the end of the world had already come and gone.

Letter Grade: D

Rated: PG-13 for intense disaster sequences and some language.

END OF WORLD

claims in an ominous tone.

So I had learned of the world's upcoming ending, but I was not satisfied. How would it end? By what cause? And so I set out.

Ultimately I learned that the ancient Mayan calendar ends on this date of Dec. 21, 2012, causing many to believe that the Mayans were predicting the end of times. Many other signs are now emerging, including skyrocketing populations, failing economies and massive losses of resources. Also the producers of the "Saw" series have announced that from now on they will create two "Saw" films a year. That is right. "Saw 12" will come out in 2012, a disturbing sign that surely may only have catastrophic conclusions.

I had thought the issue settled though, until an Aztec scholar accosted me during my research, stating the Aztec calendar ends in 2027, inferring that there will be more than one end to the world. And finally, the scariest of all, I went to the calendar on my cell phone and found out that it only goes as far as the year 2100. That is right, there will be THREE ends of the world for people to look out for.

"And finally, the scariest of all, I went to the calendar on my cell phone and found out that it only goes as far as 2012."

So enjoy the time that you have, and please, try to not get too caught up in all of the hysteria and terror caused by this. I know I am doing my best to keep calm and not cause any unneeded panic. Good night and good luck, dear citizens of Bowling Green.

always, we must serve tough. We served really well at Toledo and that helped us in the win.

"They are very balanced offensively. They hit hard and smart; plus, they have four seniors that have played very well this year and have had a lot of success. We will want to attack them just as aggressively."

All-time, Miami holds a 38-24 lead in the series and is 6-3 in neutral site matches. The last time the two teams met in the MAC Tournament was in 1999 and the Falcons beat them in five sets.

Though BG trails Miami all-time, they lead them 2-1 in the three meetings in the MAC Tournament.

All numbers aside, Van De Walle and her team are ready to go for it, despite the short week of practice.

"We're going to play hard," she said. We're the underdog this whole tournament, so we've got nothing to lose and everything to gain. I'd like our seniors to take control in this match. We're playing to win."

heavily out rebounded and the Musketeers were on fire from behind the arc in the win.

"The score and the game pretty much speak for itself," BG coach Louis Orr said after the loss.

The loss against Xavier was even more frustrating for Orr, considering the coach grew up in Cincinnati and actually coached Xavier coach Chris Mack at Winthrop High School.

Even though BG took the loss

"They just fight so hard and they care. These guys will be in tomorrow wanting to look at tape and get better."

Todd Lickliter | Iowa coach

at Xavier, the Falcons have had strong offensive outings from Otis Polk and Scott Thomas through the first two games of the season.

Polk and Thomas have averaged a combined 26.5 points per game this season, giving the Falcons a scoring option in the paint and from the outside.

In order for that offensive output to continue BG will need Polk to stay out of foul trouble. Against Xavier the center was limited to only 18 minutes of action before eventually fouling out.

The game against Iowa will continue BG's tough road schedule to open the season, of their first 11 games seven will be played on the road.

HOCKEY

Dennis Williams said. "Every time they turn we should have an orange jersey standing right there. The less space you give these guys the more successful you're going to be."

Success is beginning to make its way toward David Solway, who broke out of an early scoring slump to post a four-point weekend last week against Alaska.

In the two-game series with the Nanooks, Solway dished out two assists in the Falcons' win Friday and scored two of his own in a losing effort the next day.

"He's doing a really good job right now on the power play," Williams said. "He doesn't stop skating, and that's one of those guys that you hate to play against but you love having him on your team."

In fact, the entire line consisting of Solway, Jordan Samuels-Thomas and Kai Kantola is coming off a productive series.

Along with Solway, Samuels-Thomas also racked up four points last weekend (two goals and two assists) en route to being named CCHA Rookie of the Week.

With Kantola also producing two assists against the Nanooks, the chemistry of their line is starting to come along with each game.

"It's a blessing for us to click like that," Samuels-Thomas said. "I think we bring good size and skill and I think it's been working. We're getting a lot of shots to the net, going to the net with bigger bodies and we've been clicking really well."
